We spend a large part of our lives in buildings. These spaces and the way they are arranged consciously and unconsciously influence the behaviour of those who use these spaces. Take for example work environments that aim to maximize employee concentration.

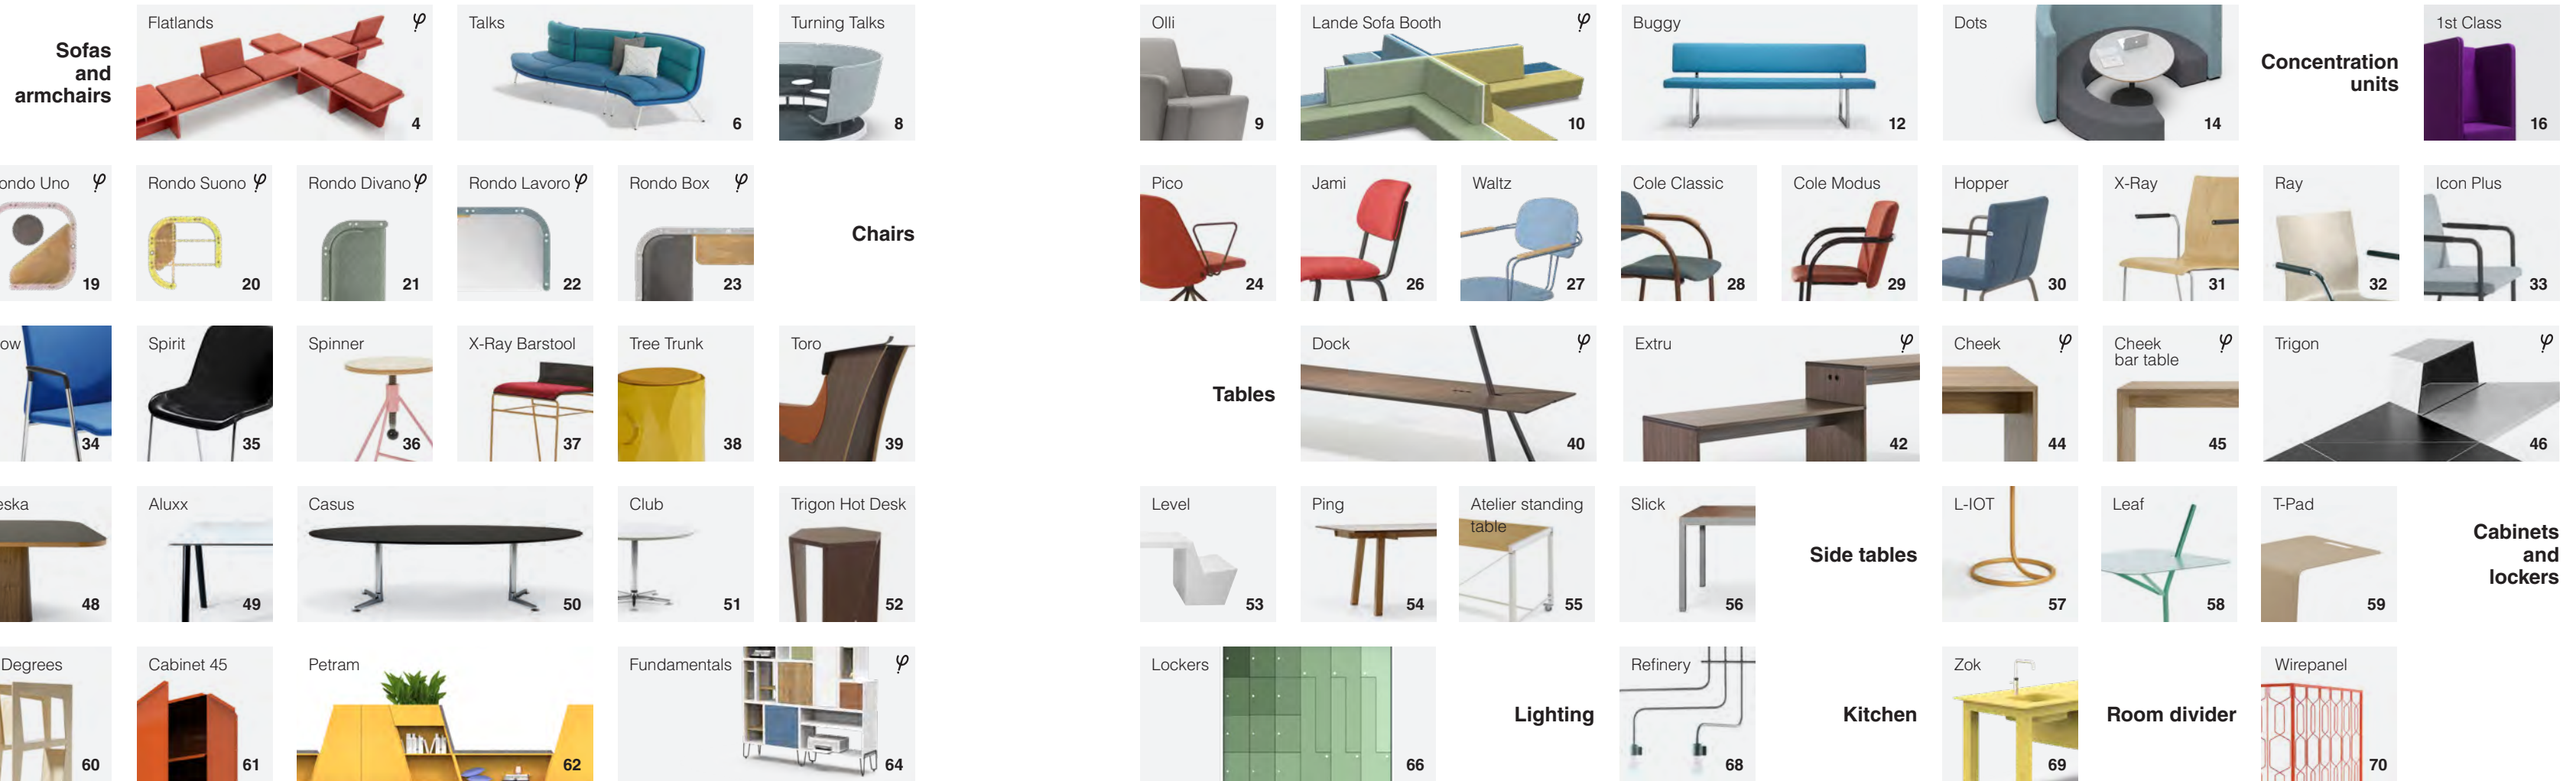

Younger generations want more and more flexibility in the way we work, especially now that we communicate and work together in a different way. As a result, today's work environment is constantly changing.

Lande Phi

To help you create a work environment that easily moulds itself to the needs of your organization, we have developed Lande Phi.

Phi is a measurement based on relationships and principles as found in nature. If we apply these structurally, we arrive at a modular system that enables us to combine various programmes and products, so that they can respond to the needs of the customer.

This modular nature also ensures that spaces can be designed sustainably.
